

Lindsay in Beijing

>> What in the world is a Lake Highlands resident doing blogging in China? Lindsay Toler is keeping neighborsgo readers close to what's going on in Beijing, site of the 2008 Summer Olympics. She's chronicling her experience at neighborsgo.com/blog/LindsayToler. She arrived in China on July 2 and hit the ground blogging. So far, she's detailed her adventures in the Forbidden City, Mao's Mausoleum and the Hongqiao Shi Chang pearl market. She's also written about her encounters with Chinglish, multicolored popcorn and Chinese bathrooms. Lindsay is a University of Missouri journalism student participating in Beijing Olympic Organization Committee's volunteer program. She was one of 61 Missouri School of Journalism students to make the trip. Never been to China? You'll feel close to the action through Lindsay's blog. Also, see her video interview at neighborsgo.com/video/1027.

Lindsay by the numbers

- 2 - number of times I've eaten at McDonalds
- 4 - number of times I've posted about my grandparents
- 5 - number of Pepto-Bismol pills taken as a precaution
- 7 - approximate number of U.S. dollars in 1 Chinese yuan
- 9 - the English channel on China Central Television
- 12.5 hours - the length of the flight
- 13 hours - the time difference from here to Dallas
- At least 50 - number of times I've said something "blows my mind"